WELCOME to the INTERNATIONAL ISSUE

Ladies and gentlemen, please pay close attention, and you will see many impressive sights during your tour of the foreign nation known as NICKELODEON MAGAZINE's International Issue. If you get separated from the group, meet at the page numbers, where famous landmarks of many countries are on display.

A Flight Improvement

To help you travel in comfort to the many lands in our International Issue, we imagined some devices that would make long plane flights more tolerable.

A CONTROL for the chair in front of you

Soothing BEACH SCENE to calm nerves during long flight

A TRAY EXTENDER so you have room for all your stuff

A MIRROR to see what's fallen under your seat

A DISPLAY SCREEN to show the flight attendant what you want

Alternating FRESH AIR/ CHOCOLATE-CHIP COOKIE SCENT from air vents

Three Things You Need to Know About This Magazine

1 When you see this it means the story is true. Real

2 We work with this dog.

I'm Zelda Van Gutter, the magazine's roving reporter. Look for my biting wit throughout the issue.

3 Our humorous International Issue should not be confused with actual international issues (which are rarely funny).

The

We got international with these six celebs.

Real

Andrew Lawrence of Oliver Beene

What is your favorite international food?
My mom is English and she makes these incredible scones. I know it's a special day when she makes scones for breakfast.

Rebecca Romijn-Stamos
of X2

What foreign languages do you speak?
I speak Dutch pretty well and enough French to get by. As a native California girl, I would love to be fluent in Spanish.

Tom Hanks

of Catch Me If You Can

What is your favorite international food?
I love Greek taramasalata. It's like Greek caviar.

Gabrielle Union of Bad Boys II

What is your favorite international food?
I love a Cuban breaded steak with onions. I live for onions.

Sandra Bullock

of Two Weeks Notice

What language would you like to learn to speak?
I'd like to go back and rediscover French. I went to school in Germany and we had to take French and English. When I moved to the States I stopped. I've been around a lot of French-speaking people lately and realized I retained a little bit of it—so I'm going back to sort of polish it up.

Patrick Stewart

of X2

What language would you like to learn to speak?
I dabble in Spanish. I shot a film in Mexico for ten weeks and it was very valuable to me to know a little.

NIXED NATIONS

Becoming a country isn't easy. You need some land, people, a flag, and—apparently—you need approval from the (totally made-up) Country Certification Bureau. Here are the rejected applications of a few countries that never got off the ground.

PROPOSED COUNTRY NAME: SPOTTISTAN

PROPOSED LOCATION: We'd like to be a group of circle-shaped, independent countries located inside the United States. Many American states are rectangular, and we believe that adding some circular patterns would really give the continent a fresh new look.

FLAG: Polka dots. (What else?)

FORM OF GOVERNMENT: Spottistan will definitely be a democracy. However, anyone who does not wear polka dots will lose the right to vote, be laughed at, made to wear stripes, and deported.

I never met a spot I didn't like.

OTHER INFORMATION: We promise never to invade Kansas, New Mexico, or any other place with corners. Plus, all citizens will grow tomatoes, to give our dots a snappy red color when seen from outer space.

NOT APPROVED

REASON: Polka dots will clash with the rest of the country—red will look especially terrible with the purple mountains' majesty. Think about checks or pinstripes, and we might reconsider.

10:29

PROPOSED COUNTRY NAME: ALARMNIA

PROPOSED LOCATION: Near Japan. Since Japan is called the Land of the Rising Sun, we would like to ensure that everybody around there wakes up in time.

FORM OF GOVERNMENT: It will run like clockwork. All tardiness will be banished.

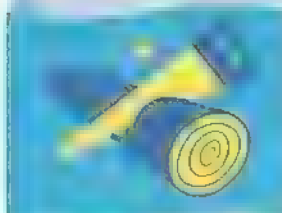

FLAG: A digital readout of the current time.

OTHER INFORMATION: We will give East Asia the option of waking up to a ringing noise, a droning buzz, or a morning radio show.

NOT APPROVED

REASON: Nowhere in your application is a snooze button mentioned!

PROPOSED COUNTRY NAME: NEW ZZZZLAND

PROPOSED LOCATION: A soft, comfy spot on the planet.

FORM OF GOVERNMENT: Our country will be a democracy where all citizens will enjoy the freedom of (mandatory) daily naps.

FLAG: Our great seal of the Log and Saw.

OTHER INFORMATION: Keep us as far from Alarmnia as possible. As for any other decisions, we'll sleep on it!

NOT APPROVED

REASON: We fear invasion from the Republic of Insomnia.

GOTTA PLAY ROUGH TO CRAM IN ALL THAT CHEESE!

MORE MMM IN THE MIDDLE.

HOW TO DRINK A LOLLIPOP

Here's what looks like an all-American story, starring two all-American kids, using all-American words native to the good old U.S. of A. But appearances are deceiving. Not only do most Americans speak a language imported from some country called England, but they also use lots of non-English words borrowed from other foreign nations.

Check out the origins of some familiar words.

by Steven Stern

An All-American Tale

Real

Dachshund is the name of a dog breed originally developed in Germany to hunt badgers; in German, dachs means "badger," and hund means "dog."

Jungle comes from the word jangal, which means "forest" in Hindi (a language spoken in India).

About 400 years ago, the French word toilette, the origin of toilet, referred to a bag for clothing or a towel. Over the following centuries, its meaning shifted—first to the process of getting dressed, then to a room in which you get dressed, then to a bathroom. Finally, around 1895, Americans started using the word to refer to the porcelain bowl itself.

Sauna is a Finnish word that first appeared in English in 1881. It means the same thing in both languages.

Algebra comes from the title of a ninth-century Arabic book of mathematics. The Arabic word al-jabr means "bring together broken parts."

Molly was outside walking Udo, her family's pet dachshund. Kevin, her older brother, had refused to do it, even though it was his turn.

It was as hot as a sauna outside, and Molly sought relief from the sun in a wooded area. She soon found herself lost.

"It's like we're wandering in the jungle," she said to Udo, who didn't seem that scared.

With nothing but bugs for company, Molly started thinking about ways of getting even with Kevin. She could stuff his algebra homework in the toilet. Or smash his favorite Robot is derived from robota, a Czech word for "forced labor." It was made up in 1920 by the Czech writer Karel Capek for a play about mechanical workers. The word came to English when the play was translated three years later.

Tattoo comes from the Polynesian languages of Tahiti and Samoa. In 1769, explorer James Cook described the islanders' tattoos in his diary, using their word, tatau, for the body markings.

Smithereens comes from smidern, an Irish Gaelic word meaning "small fragment."

Graffiti, the plural of the Italian word graffito, means "a scribble" or "a scratching."

Tycoon came into English from Japanese. The title takun means "great prince." It was used in the 1800s by the commander of the Japanese Army to make himself sound more impressive to foreigners.

Coleslaw comes from kool sla, the Dutch words for "cabbage salad."

Pal is one of the few English words that comes from Romany, a language of the Rom people, also called Gypsies (chiefly found in Europe, South Asia, and North America). Pal's origin is the Romany word phral, meaning "comrade" or "brother."

Gumbo is a kind of thick soup made with okra. The word gumbo comes from ki-ngumbo, a word in the Bantu language of Africa, meaning "okra." African slaves brought the vegetable and the word to America.

robot into smithereens. Maybe she could tattoo KICK ME on his back.

The only nearby building was the abandoned, graffiti-covered mansion of Cornelius Mayo, the 19th century coleslaw tycoon. It gave her a creepy feeling, especially when she saw a shadowy figure move around the gate.

It was her brother.

"Hey, there, pal," he said. "Come on home. Mom's making your favorite—chicken gumbo."

Udo let loose a gentle geyser of urine onto Kevin's shoe, and Molly returned home with a smile on her face.

You go, Udo!

It's well known that Ferdinand Magellan led the first voyage around the world. But Nick Mag recently discovered that a captain of one of Magellan's ships was the first person to write a Web log—more than 400 years before the Internet was invented! September 8, 1519 I am so psyched. We just set sail from Spain. Technically we're headed for the Spice Islands, but Magellan says we're going to sail around the world and prove that Earth is round. Eat your heart out, Christopher Columbus. I am going to be soooooo tan!

April 15, 1520 We crossed the equator! So cool. Well, actually, a little too cool. It got so cold we had to stop in Patagonia and wait it out. Talk about boring. No buildings, no vegetation, no Patagonia camping gear store, no nothing.

November 30, 1520

Someone pranked Magellan yesterday by switching the E and the W on his compass. We sailed backward for about a day! Magellan didn't even crack a smile. Lighten up, Ferd.

Questions? Comments? Ship needs a captain?
E-mail Blogger1@roundtheworld.net

March 14 1521 Bad night last night. The guy next to me must have eaten a case of dried figs. He was producing so much wind that we tied him to a mast and had him tow the ship. He increased our speed by about 50 knots per hour.

December 14 1521 We've been trying to cross this huge ocean that Magellan calls "the Pacific." It means "peaceful," but that's not how I'm feeling. The crew has been eating everything from sawdust to leather because we're totally out of food.

Question: Anyone out there know the best way to cook sawdust?
(Comments: 1)

Comment: Sawdust isn't so bad if you prepare it in a lovely flotsam sauce.
Check out food out of sawdust by Limcy@12/15/1521

February 14 1522 Had this weird dream last night about a sponge that wears oblong-shaped pantaloons and lives in a pineapple on the ocean floor. Said his name was Roberto. I think the stress is getting to me.

April 28 1522 Things are getting kind of heavy. Magellan went and got himself killed in the Philippines. I guess it's time for me to learn how to steer this boat.

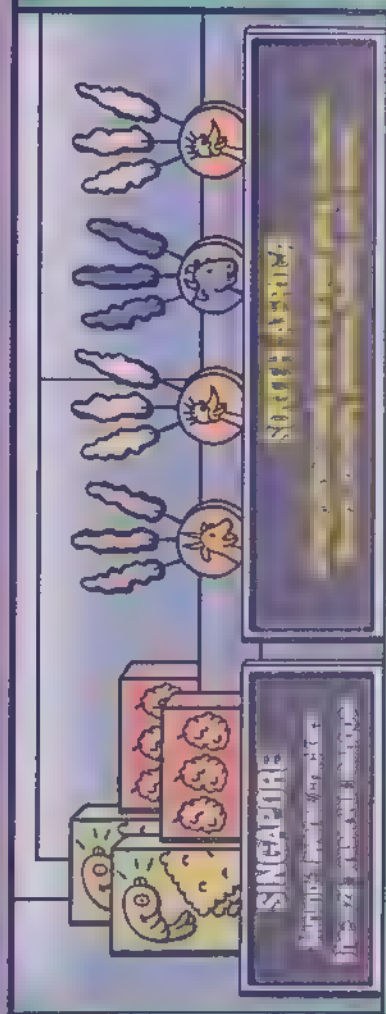

September 6 1522 Hey, everyone, I'm back home! Now we know that Earth is round for sure. I'm living proof of it. Can't wait to eat some real food. I just sent word on a ship headed for Italy to bring me back a large pizza with extra cheese. Should be here in about three months. :)

Hugh

-plains It All

Australian actor is back as Wolverine in X2, the sequel to X-Men.
We talked to this mutation sensation.

NICKELODEON MAGAZINE:
Are you anything like Wolverine?

I'm not nearly as grumpy as he is, but I do have a bit of a temper. You don't see it very often.

How did you psych yourself up to play Wolverine?

I've got this weird ritual that started by accident in the first movie. About two or three weeks into the shooting during the dead of winter, I was taking a shower at 5:30 in the morning and the hot water wasn't working. My wife was sleeping, so I couldn't scream and yell, but I was gritting my teeth. The moment I finished that shower I was like, "Hang on a sec, that's exactly how Wolverine feels when he is really annoyed." So then I had to take a cold shower every morning as part of the role, or it would be bad luck for the day. Thankfully, X2 was filming during the summer when a cold shower wasn't nearly as painful.

How does it feel to wear Wolverine's costume?

When I first put it on, I felt bloody uncomfortable. It was so tight I couldn't even sit down, and I got a huge rip right on my behind. But it's got pads built into it so that when you are doing all that action stuff and rolling around, it's comfortable. I was grateful for that.

Did you do your own stunts in the movie?

I would say probably ninety percent of them. I love doing all that sort of stuff. When I was a kid I was always jumping off cliffs into the ocean. Now I'm grown up and getting paid for it.

What was your favorite scene to shoot for this movie?

In terms of action, my favorite was the big fight sequence. It took us about three weeks to shoot. Despite quite a few bruises and things like that, I really loved it. It actually pushed me to the limit.

How did you keep up your endurance for three weeks?

I had to get in good shape for the movie, so I was pretty fit, and then after that there was a lot of Tylenol.

Have you ever seen a real wolverine?

I never have. I did go to an IMAX movie once, and saw this whole thing on wolves and wolverines that was fantastic. I got some good ideas from that. Wolves' eyes always look like they're menacing, even if they're not, because they've always got their noses close to the ground while they look up at you. I tried to do that a bit as Wolverine—always have my head down a little bit like a wolf.

What mutant ability is Hugh Jackman hiding?

Well, I can do this freaky thing with my eyes. It's my party trick. I can shake my eyes like they're vibrating, and it kind of makes you feel a bit sick to look into them. That's about the limit of my mutant abilities.

If you could have any super-powers, what would they be?

I think teleporting. As long as it can be an international teleporting thing. I really miss Australia a lot, and it's so far to get back there on a plane that I don't get back nearly as much as I'd like.

What is your favorite Australian expression?

"Spit the dummy," which we said quite a bit on the set. Dummy means "pacifier" in Australia, so it's when a baby spits out its pacifier and just screams. If you ever see someone who is going ballistic, just say to them, "Don't spit the dummy." Wolverine spits the dummy all the time.

What is your favorite Australian dish?

Meat pie! It's a pastry, sort of like a pie, but it has mincemeat in it and a few vegetables and stuff like that. You put on a bit of ketchup or "tomato sauce," as we say down there. □

WHAT? NO HALL PASS?: Wolverine fighting off an invasion of bad guys at the school for mutants.

X2

Devil With a Blue Face On Real

Alan Cumming may look devilish in X2, but he's really a good-guy mutant called Nightcrawler. He clued us in about being blue during the three-and-a-half months of filming.

How long it took him to apply his makeup: "I was in the makeup chair every morning for four hours. One time I had to have my body done as well as my face, and that took ten hours."

Why his makeup job took so long: First, makeup artists applied fake tattoos to his face, then icing-like makeup to give the tattoos a raised look. Next, they attached fake ears and added several layers of blue makeup. "It was sprayed on. It's freezing when it touches your face. That was really horrible first thing in the morning."

Wait, there's more: "I also had yellow contact lenses and funny teeth. Sometimes I had to wear a harness for flying and a harness for my tail. It was insane."

Did he think his makeup looked realistic? "I didn't have other blue people to compare it to [laughs]."

At the end of the day: He often couldn't get all his makeup off. "My dog really liked the smell of the fake toenails and she ate one. It came out in her poop." ☐

Stuff About Duff Real

We talked to 15-year-old Hilary Duff about her starring role in The Lizzie McGuire Movie.

NICKELODEON MAGAZINE: Is there a big difference between working on a TV show and a movie?

HILARY DUFF: Yes. For the TV show, I would do four scenes a day, wardrobe fittings, and school. On the movie, we would only shoot one scene a day, so I could focus and pay a little more attention.

Would you rather work in TV or movies?

I'm trying to figure that out right now. Most movies are filmed out of town and it's hard for me because I'm fifteen. I miss home a lot when I'm gone—I miss my friends and my family and my dogs. Then again, on a TV show you have to play the same character for such a long time. With movies, I can play a character and be done with it.

How long were you in Italy shooting the movie?

We were there for a month and a half. It was amazing. I'd never been to Europe before. It was overwhelming at first because it's a whole different world. It made me realize how much history they have there that we don't have over here.

What was your favorite Italian food?

Definitely the pizza. I was addicted. There's no thick crust and the cheese over there is amazing. When we got back to Vancouver, Canada, to shoot the rest of the movie, I was going through pizza withdrawal!

I go through that every day.

Are you like Lizzie?

She's a little shy and I'm kind of shy. People might think that I'm standoffish, but I'm really just shy. Lizzie's not comfortable in her own skin, but I'm pretty secure with who I am. Lizzie's trying to find herself, and that's why so many people relate to the show: She's just a normal fourteen- or fifteen-year-old girl trying to find her way through life. Also, she has an annoying little brother, and I have a cool older sister.

Did you pick out any of the clothes that you wore on the show?

Pretty much all of them. I love that part. They let me use my own style.

Do you like to watch any other shows?

I like to watch Gilmore Girls and 7th Heaven. I'm obsessed with SpongeBob SquarePants.

What would be on a Hilary Duff pizza?

Cheese, big tomatoes, olives, artichokes, sauce, and that's it. And it would definitely be an Italian pizza. ☐

EUROPEAN VACATION: Lizzie (Hilary Duff) and Paolo (Paolo Bonolis) in Italy.

Oh, Brother!

Real

The fourth season of The Brothers Garcia kicks off on Sunday, May 4. Thirteen-year-old Alvin Alvarez (right), who plays Larry Garcia, gave us the scoop about his work schedule, what he does in his free time, and his dream movie role.

NICKELODEON MAGAZINE: When you tape The Brothers Garcia, how early do you have to get to the set?

Alvin Alvarez: We usually start at 7:30 in the morning, but the girls come in earlier to get their hair and makeup done.

Do you get a long lunch break?

We get half an hour for lunch, but it always ends up being longer. We watch TV, talk, and occasionally practice lines if the next scene is tough, but usually we just hang out.

Do your costumes ever get dirty when you eat lunch?

We wear robes because there's a lot of juicy food.

What has been your favorite episode of The Brothers Garcia?

The last episode of the first season. It's about Larry filming the whole family going about their everyday life. I was holding a camera and filming everything. Some of the footage I filmed actually ended up in the episode. I was already into photography, but I started to think motion pictures were cool after that.

So do you make movies in your free time?

Yes! I have a baby brother who's nine months old. I film him, then edit the footage and add background music.

FAMILY GARCIA: Alvin Alvarez (bottom), Bobby Gonzalez (center), Jeffrey Licon (top), and Vaneza Loza Pitynski.

Has being in a series changed the way you watch television?

Yes. When I watch television, I look more at the acting and apply it to myself. I remember when I used to just watch TV and movies and have fun. But now it's like, "Hmm, maybe I can do something like that."

How do you learn your lines?

By now, if I know what's happening in the scene, I'll basically know what Larry would say about it. [For long scenes,] I'll practice lines at home at night before I go to sleep, and then between shooting scenes the next morning.

The cast of the show also filmed a TV movie in Mexico. What was the coolest thing that you learned while you were there?

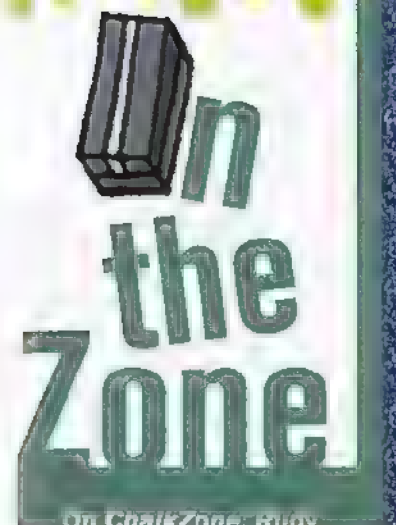

I learned how many steps there are in a [Mayan] pyramid. One for each day of the year. That's a lot of steps—365!

What movie do you wish you were in?

Planet of the Apes. That would be cool, even though the people playing the apes had to have three hours of makeup every morning, and early morning is one of my worst times. I'm a fan of sleep, but it would be worth it. ☐

10th Birth

Greetings From Zlittlz!

As our 10th birthday in August approaches, fan letters are already coming in. Even our know-it-all alien correspondent, QZXLXZQ, wrote to us, but a freak meteor shower deleted some words. The first missing word below has 10 letters. Once you've figured it out, remove a letter and scramble the remaining ones to find the next missing word. Keep doing that until you get down to a single letter. (You can also start with the smaller words at the bottom of the message and work your way up.)

by Andrew Brisman

Answers on page 70.

Greetings, E _ _ _ _ _ I _ _ _ _ _ G _ _ _ _ _ !

I'm so glad it's your birthday, Nick Mag. You are my favorite thing about Earth after paper clips, The Osbournes, chocolate-chip ice cream, and the way you slice your pizzas into those funny shapes you call _ _ _ _ _ I _ _ _ _ _ G _ _ _ _ _ .

Mostly, I'm glad because it means I still have a job as your advice columnist.

But enough about you. Let's talk about me. While my species doesn't usually get mad, you'll see me at my A _ _ _ _ _ G _ _ _ _ _ when I get letters from your readers suggesting I look _ _ _ _ _ G _ _ _ _ _ . (As interstellar beings go, I'm actually quite the hottie!) And don't get me started about those secret _ _ _ _ _ in the black suits who are always trying to capture aliens like me. What a pain. At this _ _ _ _ _ of my life, I shouldn't have to deal with such nonsense. It's not like I'm going to take your Golden _ _ _ _ _ Bridge home as a souvenir or _ _ _ _ _ you tasty humans! (Even though I could.) So I might not be coming to your party. I might just stay _ _ _ _ _ home on Zlittlz and read a good book, such as Planetary Conquest From _ _ _ _ _ to Z.

Thanks for 10 years of out-of-this-world fun, Nick Mag. Can I have a raise?

Wave to the sky,

Sing to the tune of
"Twinkle, Twinkle,
Little Star."

Nick Mag, you are 10 today.
Here's some things you'll hear folks say:
"How you've grown," and "I recall
When this magazine was small."
But you needn't hide nor flinch—
You've no cheeks for them to pinch.

Sing to the tune of
"Yankee Doodle."

Zelda, Ray-9, Impy, otters,
Grampa, QZ, Funky—
To this list of characters,
Nick Mag, please add a monkey.
Monkeys are so humorous,
and they eat bananas.
They could even teach QZ
some decent human manners.

At your big important meetings,
they would be so funny—
Swinging, jumping, pooping, and they'd do it for no money.
Monkeys are so humorous,
plus they are good leaders.
And just think how much you'd please your lower primate readers.

Lynda Jones traced the international origins of three popular pastimes.

Bungee-Jumping

Where it started: Vanuatu (a small country in the South Pacific)

How it began: Bungee-jumping comes from an ancient ritual still practiced today by young Vanuatu men. A diver climbs to the top of a 100-foot wooden tower, and ties one end of a rope made of very elastic vines to his ankles (above) and the other to the tower. Then he leaps to the ground—without a safety harness or a net below to break his fall. The challenge is to stop as close to the ground as possible. Completing this hair-raising stunt elevates the diver's status from boy to man.

How it traveled: When members of a sports club in England saw photos of Vanuatu men "land diving," they decided to try it themselves. In 1979, the group made the first modern bungee jump off a 250-foot bridge in Bristol, England. They used a cord made from a bunch of small elastic ropes. Bungee is British slang for "rubber."

The Jump Rope

Where it started: Egypt and China

How it began: Historians believe that rope skipping may have been invented by dockworkers in ancient Egypt and China. The laborers would use ropes to secure boats to the docks, then jump over or duck under the ropes as they worked. Kids began imitating what they saw and turned it into a game.

JUMP TO IT! An English girl jumping rope in the 1800s.

How it traveled: Visiting sailors took the idea back to their own lands.

The Yo-Yo

Where it started: China, Greece, and the Philippines

How it began: The yo-yo's origins can be traced back to ancient China and Greece. The modern-day yo-yo, however, evolved from a Philippine invention. The word yo-yo means "to return" in Tagalog, a native language of the Philippines. Historians believe that the Filipinos used a yo-yo-like weapon in the 16th century to hunt wild animals. The hunters made a disk out of a heavy rock, then tied a 20-foot vine around a groove in the rock. A hunter perched high in a tree would throw the yo-yo at an animal below, then pull the weapon back up.

How it traveled: In the 1920s, Pedro Flores, a Filipino, invented the modern yo-yo (left) and brought it to America.

HEAD-FIRST FEAT: A Vanuatu diver free-falls from a 100-foot tower to the end of his rope.

IS THERE A DETECTIVE IN THE HOUSE?: A creepy cabin in Nancy Drew: Ghost Dogs of Moon Lake, which Anne wrote.

Anne Ludwick used to write scripts for TV shows, including the murder-mystery series Matlock. Now Anne uses her mystery-writing skills to pen Nancy Drew computer games, including The Haunted Carousel, which comes out this summer. Andrew Brisman investigated and asked Anne some nosy questions.

Real

NICKELODEON MAGAZINE: How many suspects do you need to make a good mystery?

ANNE LUDWICK: In Matlock it was always at least three, and in these games it's at least three. I'd say four is ideal.

What's the difference between writing for TV and writing a computer game?

When you sit down to design a game or a TV script, you have to think of how many characters you're going to have, who they're going to be, what the main settings are, and what the main plot is. [But a game script] is like a flow chart: If a player starts with this character, this is going to happen. However, if a player starts over here, this happens, and here is where [the story lines] intertwine.

How did you become a TV screenwriter?

It's something I always wanted to do. I was a big TV fan. When I was twelve or thirteen I'd make up my own stories about characters on TV. I started writing scripts on my own when I was sixteen or seventeen. Later I went to graduate school and took filmmaking classes.

What does Nancy Drew have that Sherlock Holmes doesn't?

Nancy lacks that snooty kind of know-it-all, my-dear-Watson attitude. She's just much more normal, human, and down-to-earth.

Which character in Nancy Drew: The Haunted Carousel is your favorite?

Elliot Chen (below). He's a bit unorthodox in attitude and appearance, and he enjoys talking to Nancy because he's a procrastinator. As long as he's talking to her, he has an excuse for not getting his work done. I can relate to that. □
